

CONTENTS

|                |           |
|----------------|-----------|
| Preface | 11 |
|----------------|-----------|

Part One Heidegger and the Realm of Time

|                     |           |
|---------------------|-----------|
| Introduction | 25 |
|---------------------|-----------|

|  |           |
|--|-----------|
| Chapter I. The Subject and Time – From the Cogito to Dasein | 27 |
|--|-----------|

1. The Cartesian subject 27; 2. Kant and the transcendental subject 30; a. The structure of consciousness 30; b. The role of time 33; c. The subject's relation to time 35; 3. The Heideggerian alternative: Being-in-the-World 36

|  |           |
|--|-----------|
| Chapter II: Being-in-the-World: The Twofold Structure of Daily Life | 42 |
|--|-----------|

1. Phenomenology and the science of Being 42; 2. Being and beings: the Layer structure of the world 44; 3. The Worldliness of the World 48; 4. The Self and the They 50; 5. The uncanniness of daily life 53

|  |           |
|--|-----------|
| Chapter III: Dasein's Temporality | 61 |
|--|-----------|

1. Care and Temporality 61; 2. The ecstatic structure of Temporality 64; 3. Heidegger's reading of Aristotle: the "Now" and the horizon of Time 65; 4. Temporality: the primal structure of time 67; 5. Thrownness, Understanding and Meaning 69; 6. Metaphysics of presence 72; 7. Temporality and Selfness: the reversal notion of Heideggerian time 75

Part Two
Freud's Temporal Deficiency

Introduction 87

Chapter IV: The Place of Time in the Psyche's Mechanism:
The Freudian Project and its Origin in Brentano 89

1. The psyche's mechanism in the Project 89; a. The principle of constancy 89; b. Memory and energy accumulation 90; c. Pain and the problem of quality 92; d. Pleasure and Un-pleasure 93; e. Wishing, rejection and ego 94; 2. The status of time in the Project 96; 3. Freud as Brentano's student? 101; 4. The ideological connection between Freud of 1895 and Brentano of 1873: A debate on Aviva Cohen's interpretation 103; 5. Brentano's epistemology, 1871-1876 105; a. The conceptual framework of psychology from an empirical point of view 105; b. The consciousness processes: intentionality and representations 108; 6. Temporal consciousness in Brentano's thought according to Husserl 112; 7. Summary 115

Chapter V: Freud's Concealment of Temporality: Ida Bauer ("Dora") as a Case Study 118

1. Ida Bauer's case description 118; a. Description of the events prior to the case publication 118; b. Content of the sequence of events 119; c. The story 120; 2. Contemporary psychoanalytical literature regarding Ida's case 121; a. Erik Eriksson 121; b. Jules Glen 122; c. Steven Marcus 123; d. Additional references 124; 3. Why does the Freudian method overlook Ida Bauer's emotional world? 126; 4. The way Freud's interpretation technique conceals the structure of temporality 130; 5. Ida's dream 133; 6. The interpretation technique's dependence upon the phenomena of temporality 135; 7. Summary 137

|   |  |
|---|--|
| Chapter VI: From Neurosis to a Structural Consciousness: |  |
| The Question of Time (1905-1937)                         | 142                               |
| 1. Three essays on the theory of sexuality (1905)               | 142;                                     |
| 2. The topographical consciousness system (1913)                | 150;                                     |
| 3. Beyond the pleasure principle (1920)                         | 152; 4. The structural                   |
| consciousness system (1923-1937)                                | 157; a. Id, Ego and Super-               |
| ego   | 158; b. Time and the unconsciousness 161 |
|   |  |
| A Summary: The Notion of Time in Freud's Thought         | 163                               |

Part Three Psycho-ontology

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Introduction  | 169  |
|    |   |
| Chapter VII: Ontological Readings of the Narcissistic Stage             | 171  |
| 1. The place of ontological thought in relation to the psychoanalytical theory | 171; a. The relation between the psyche structure and reality 172; b. The Narcissistic stage 174; 2. The return to the Narcissistic notion in the psychoanalytical thought after Freud 175; a. Jacques Lacan 175; b. Heinz Kohut 175; c. Donald W. Winnicott 177; d. Summary 177; 3. Narcissism as a manifestation of a non-linear flow of time 178; 4. From Narcissism to reality (the structural consciousness): Freud and Loewald 179; a. Two fundamental concepts of reality 180; b. Defiance as a form of psyche's organization 181; c. The connection between Super-ego and reality according to Freud 183; d. Super-ego and the capacity to recognize reality according to Loewald 184; e. Super-ego and time 186; f. Summary 188; 5. The ontological-temporal structure of Narcissism 189 |

|   |   |
|---|---|
| Chapter VIII: Back to Ida – Fundamental Concepts in  |   |
| Psychoanalysis as a Manifestation of Time-structures | 194                              |
| 1. Transference, contra transference and temporality        | 196;                                    |
| 2. Ego, repression, unconsciousness and temporality         | 200;                                    |
| a. Ego and temporality                                      | 202; b. Repression and                  |
| temporality   | 205; c. Unconsciousness and temporality |
| 3. Therapy and temporality                                  | 211                                     |
|   |   |
| Summary  | 217                              |
|   |   |
| Epilogue   | 219                              |
|   |   |
| Bibliography   | 223                              |
|   |   |
| Index of Subjects and Names                          | 229                              |