

CONTENTS

Preface	9
Introduction: Poetry and liturgy: The dual identity of piyyut	13
Chapter One: The basic characteristics of the utterance in personal reshuyot (in relation to Psalms and piyyutim of other genres)	17
Personal reshuyot and Psalms: Elements of similarity 18; Personal reshuyot and Psalms: Elements of difference 19; The generic context and the status of praises to God 24; Counter-examples and the meaning of the distinctions described above 27; Absolute value of praise and the Sufi spirit 30; On a possible connection between liturgical function and poetic genre 32; Expressions of supplication in personal reshuyot and other liturgical poems 33; Different types of supplication 33; On expressions of supplication in personal reshuyot 34; Appendix: Personal reshuyot – sources, content and form 40; Personal tone 41
Chapter Two: Expressing the inexpressible: On the religious experience and its linguistic form	43
“ The soul of every living being ” 45; From prayer to liturgical poetry 49; The religious experience: Terror and pleasure 53; “ I shall flee from you to you ” 57; Summary 65
“Aspect Switching” in the religious experience	67
Chapter Three: “I am dust and ashes”: On the feeling of human nothingness in various generic contexts: Personal reshuyot and selihot	69
The sense of being created 69; The sense of being created in selihot 70; Rational and irrational: The “two races” of religious feeling 74; The sense of being created in personal reshuyot 75; The sense of being created and the terrible mystery 77; The sense of being created and the idea of God’s absolute dominance over man 90; Selihot and personal reshuyot: Contrasting aspects of the religious experience 97; Summary 99; Appendix: Overt and covert in the language of Shlomo Ibn Gabirol’s poem “Before I was Thy grace came to me” – a song of praise or a supplication for mercy? 102

Chapter Four: The sublime and the image of God in Psalms and various genres of Hebrew liturgical poetry in Spain 109

On the appropriateness of the sublime to the image of God 110; Terror and pleasure: The complex effect of the sublime 110; The sublime and the irrational 112; Psalms of glorification 113; Piyyutim of sanctity and glorification: A test case – the ofan piyyutim 124; The image of God: From sublime to shelter 135; Redemption poems (ge’ulot) and their like (me’orot, ahavot, zulatot) 135; Elegies for the nation and the individual 139; Selihot 141; Personal reshuyot 145; Religion and esthetics 149; Summary 150

Chapter Five: “My soul and my flesh yearn for Him”:
On yearning for God in personal reshuyot and other poems 152

Chapter Six: The Valley of Achor as a gate of hope: On the changing role of pessimistic ideas in Hebrew secular and liturgical poetry from Spain (philosophical poems, admonitions [tohachot] and personal reshuyot) 161

Pessimistic ideas in poems of fate 163; The pessimistic group of poems 169; The religious group of poems 170; He who distinguishes the sacred from the secular, light from darkness 171; Personal reshut as admonition 179; Summary 188

Chapter Seven: The case of “Shogeh be-hek yaldut” 190

Chapter Eight: On sleep and wakefulness – one theme in changing contexts 200

References 211

Sources 211; Studies 213

Indices 219

Subject index 219; Index of works 220