

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	9
------------------------	----------

Preface	11
----------------	-----------

Part I The Beginning of the Journey: Directions and Diversions

Chapter 1: Introduction – The initial emergence of the rootless character in modern Hebrew literature	21
--	-----------

Characteristics and features of the rootless character 21: Historical background of the character's emergence 22; Labeling and naming the character as "rootless" 23; The presence and acceptance of the rootless character in the field of modern Hebrew literature 25; Classification of the types of rootless characters and their features – Critical trends 27: An aesthetic examination – Artistic distance 28; A thematic examination – Characteristics and nature of the experience of being uprooted 29; A synthetic examination – Thematics and Aesthetics 30; Beginnings – Hebrew Enlightenment autobiographies as "precursor" texts 31; Solomon Maimon: An Autobiography, by Solomon Maimon 34; Aviezer, by M.A. Ginzburg 37; Sins of Youth, by M.L. Lilienblum 39; Summary – The first appearance of the rootless character in modern Hebrew literature 41

Chapter 2: The rootless character in early twentieth century Diaspora stories: Old and new perspectives	44
--	-----------

Turn of the century: Writers and works 44; In the process of detachment – M.J. Berdichevsky's rootless characters 45: "Orva Prach" (Nonsense) – The illusion of a world citizen 48; "The Stranger" – A symbolic déjà vu 50; Is he really a nihilist? I. Bershadsky's rootlessness 51: "Be'ein Matara" (Aimless) – Russian nihilism or a Jewish cocktail 51; In splendid isolation – protagonists in Bershadsky's short stories 55; The lost son – I.D. Berkowitz's rootlessness 56: "Talush" (The Rootless) – Deviations from the pattern 56; "Viduy" (Confession) and "Banechar" (Foreign Land) – A geographical or a psychological-spiritual return 59; And providing there are supporting points – J.H. Brenner’s rootlessness 61; “Bahoref” (In Winter): Damaged from a past literary life 61; “Misaviv lanekuda” (Around the Point): The ‘Kuzari’ versus Berdichevsky’s works 66; When the protagonist himself is an Impressionist – U.N. Gnessin’s rootlessness 73; “Hatzida” (Sideways) – When life began to tilt 78; “Benotayim” (Meanwhile) – To be or not to be 80; “Beterem” (The Time Before) – Towards one place 82; “Etzel” (Beside) – And what will be? 85; Summary – The Diaspora’s rootless character: Forever in-between worlds 87

Chapter 3: In Eretz Israel: The rootless pioneer of the second and third waves of immigration

90

To change and be changed – The rootless character ‘ascends’ to the land of Israel 90; The rootless character in second wave immigration literature 94: “Mikan Umikan” (From Here and There) by J.H. Brenner – On resistance 94; “Tmol Shilshom” (Only Yesterday) by S.Y. Agnon – Jerusalem of Above and Below 106; The rootless character in third wave immigration literature 117: “KeOr Yahel” (When the Candle Lights) by Y. Ya’ari – The agonies are pleasant 117; “Megilat Tanchum” (The Scroll of Tanchum), “Israel Zvi”, and “Echad Me’Elef” (One Out of a Thousand) by Y. Shenhar – Ridiculous carnival 123; Summary – The intermediacy of third wave immigration literature 129

Part II Evolution and Continuity

Chapter 4: One from here and one from there – “New clothing for an old character”

135

Can the two proceed together? 135; “Chayey Nisuim” (Married Life) by D. Fogel – Impressionism and Expressionism as representative codes 136; Rootless among the rootless 139; A novel’s impressionistic space 143; A novel’s expressionistic space 146; Moving from one space to another 149; Agonies and pleasures – married life and rootlessness 154; “Mehatchala” by J.H. Brenner – a parodic homage to early modern Hebrew literature 155

Chapter 5: The rootless Sabra: An oxymoronic character in native Israeli narratives	166
Rootlessness as passage and initiation 166; “Mish’olim Basadot” (Paths in the Fields) by S. Yizhar – A person “with no weight” 171; “Hu halach basadot” (He Walked through the Fields) by Moshe Shamir – Hero of his generation? 178; “Hacheshbon vehanefesh” (The Reckoning and the Soul) by H. Bartov – A damaged seismograph 187
Chapter 6: Everything and nothing	197
Walking, but where to – the disintegration of the term “talush” (rootless) 197; “Hachay al hamet” (The Living on the Dead) and “Machbarot Evyatar” (Evyatar’s Notebooks) by Aharon Megged – Fertilizer on my literary field 202; “Chayey Elyakum” (The Life of Elyakum), “Besof Ma’arav” (A Castle in Spain), “Sefer Ha’hazayot” (The Book of Hallucinations) by B. Tammuz – The sad clown 211: “The life of Elyakum” – If I am not for myself, who is for me? 215; “A Castle in Spain” – Archetypal memory 218; “The Book of Hallucinations” – Journey in a freight train 221
Chapter 7: A kind of summary – The Hebrew rootless character	225
The rootless character as a mark of protest, subversion and critique: the intersection of masculinity and nationalism 225; The female rootless character – An initial reading 228
Bibliographic Abbreviations	237
Sources of the Original Publication of Some of the Book’s Chapters	252
Index	253