

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments 5

Introduction 9

Designed product research 12; Aesthetic research in a postmodern environment 15

SHELL I

AESTHETIC OBJECT AND AESTHETIC EXPERIENCE

1. The Phenomenology of the Aesthetic Object 21

2. The Aesthetic Experience and Disinterestedness 28

Aesthetic research tools – a preliminary review 30; The concept of taste 30; Schopenhauer and the aesthetic position: The subject of will-free knowledge 33; The aesthetic attitude in the twentieth century 35; Summary 39

3. Kant’s Judgments of Taste in Designed Consumer Product Research 43

The four key distinguishing features of Kant’s Judgments of Taste 44; Judging designed objects in accordance with Paragraph 16 of Kant’s Critique of Judgment 48; Forsey’s discussion of Paragraph 16 53

SHELL II

FROM AESTHETIC OBJECT TO DESIGNED CONSUMER PRODUCT

4. The Nature of Designed Aesthetic Objects and Their Cultural Connections 71

Design and consumption: Use of goods in cultural contexts 71; Comparing the hybrid aesthetic consumer environment with those of art and nature 75

5. Cultural Categories as Aesthetic Characteristics 83

The British Consumer Revolution: From class society to consumer society 84; Imitation, innovation and authenticity 89; Imitation, fitness and functionality 90; Imitation, innovation and variation 94; Imitation and the concept of taste 96; The direct connection between aesthetic qualities and imitation 96; Imitation and authenticity 99; Summary 102

SHELL III

THE DESIGNED CONSUMER PRODUCT AS A COMPONENT OF CULTURE

6. Moral Beauty and Cultural Disinterestedness 107

Moral beauty 108; British empiricist philosophy vis-à-vis the Consumer Revolution 111; Shaftesbury's ethical/aesthetic philosophy and its connection with the term "Disinterestedness" 115; From moral lack of interest to cultural Disinterestedness – analytical proof 126

7. Brand Name Ethics: The Brand Name as a Friend 130

8. The Aesthetics of Cultural Form: From Conclusion to Inception 135

Bibliography and List of Abbreviations 143

Index 155